Citizenship in America
COURSE DESCRIPTIVE TITLE

CALENDAR DESCRIPTION: This course examines the changing and contested definitions of citizenship in the United States from the late 18th century to the late 20th century. Through a chronological and thematic approach, we will examine how membership in the American political and civic community has been defined over the years. We will look at legal, political, economic and social definitions of citizenship, and pay special attention to the dynamics of exclusion based on race, ethnicity, economic status, religion, gender, and sexual orientation. All these have fundamentally shaped the definition and exercise of one's rights and obligations as a citizen of the United States.

PREREQUISITES: Nine credits of lower level history, which must include one of HIST 241 or HIST 242 (required fall 2005).

Note: As of September 2008 the prerequisites will change to the following:
 HIST 242, six additional credits of lower-level history, and four credits of 300-level history.

COREQUISITES: None.
