	History of Indigenous Peoples in Latin America
COURSE DESCRIPTIVE TITLE

CALENDAR DESCRIPTION:

This course explores the history of indigenous peoples in Latin America through the in-depth study of a particular region (the Maya area, central Mexico, the Andes, or the Amazon), typically from the pre-European period to the present. Topics may include the political, economic, and sociocultural transformation of indigenous societies under colonial rule; the shifting, complex relationship between indigenous peoples and the state, considering questions of citizenship, ethnicity, class, and gender; national ideology and indigenismo; struggles over land, labour, and other resources; religious change; repression and rebellion; the impact of state-directed development policies; and the emergence of new identities.

PREREQUISITES: Nine credits of lower-level history, which must include one of HIST 261 or HIST 262.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES / GOALS / OUTCOMES / LEARNING OUTCOMES:

One of the major goals of History 458 is to further develop students' critical skills in creating their own arguments and evaluating those of others. As well, the course seeks to enhance students' ability to communicate their ideas, both in writing and in oral presentations. In crafting their analyses, students will draw on a wide range of primary and secondary sources.

History 458 will provide students with a comprehensive understanding of the historical experiences of indigenous peoples in Latin America; as well, it will contribute to students' knowledge of European colonialism, state formation, ethnicity and class, development policies, and the varied impacts of economic change. The course will build on material discussed in lower-level Latin American history offerings (History 261 and 262), and it will complement other upper-level courses focused on Latin America (History 359 and 459), as well as History 326 (The History of Native Peoples in Canada). History 458 will also augment other Latin American courses offered at UCFV (in LAS and SCMS).
