LEARNING OBJECTIVES / GOALS / OUTCOMES / LEARNING OUTCOMES:

- Significantly increase communicative competence through the development of listening, speaking, reading, and writing skills.
- Provide a solid review of grammatical structures in a functional context.
- Introduce a variety of literary readings from Canada and other regions to provide a better understanding of different cultures as well as increase vocabulary and present the differences in style and content.

METHODS:

The class is conducted in French with students working together in pairs and small groups. In addition to regular classroom activities students are to work with computerized multimedia programs. Composition skills are developed by the writing and rewriting of two short essays.

In addition to class work, students meet once a week with a native speaker in small tutorials, i.e. conversation groups of six to seven people. Activities vary and include practising various structures as well as discussion and role play. A feature length film will be viewed and discussed in French.

COURSE CONTENT:

[Course content varies by instructor. An example of course content might be:]

This is a one-semester course independent of 225, but linked to French 216, its companion course. The first three sections (unités) of Points de rencontre will be studied in French 215; the last three will be studied in French 216. The two courses may be studied as separate modules. We present thematic readings, cultural information, contextualized comprehension, grammar, and vocabulary exercises, followed by more open-ended activities. The related Cahier exercises contain many written activities to emphasize correct structures. There are also web-sites to visit, suggested video and film viewings.

The grammar structures reviewed in French 215 are: reflexive verbs, the subjunctive, disjunctive pronouns, verbs plus infinitive, idiomatic reflexive verbs, the passive voice, gender and professions, the verbs “offrir”, “suivre”, “lire” and “écire”, the future simple tense, the imperfect and past composite, present conditional, idioms with “depuis”, use of the present participle, the verb “devoir” and the impersonal expression “il faut”. Readings include articles from Châtelaine, La Presse, Le Soleil, Magazine Santé, La Rotonde and others.
