CALENDAR DESCRIPTION:

This course takes an in-depth look at politics, society, and culture in Tudor-Stuart Britain. The first half of the course traces the political narrative of the period, examining the transformation of Britain from a land on the geo-political periphery into a European powerhouse. Moving from a chronological to a thematic approach, the remaining weeks of the course are devoted to the exploration of issues that have been the basis of stimulating exchange amongst historians of the field. These may include (but are not limited to): the nature of Anglicanism, the conflict between court and country, the rise of the gentry, changes in the family, and the emergence of new cultural institutions such as coffee houses and scientific societies.
